celebrating hispanic/latinx heritage month

Pancho Segura surmounted a sickly and impoverished childhood in Ecuador to become one of the world's leading tennis players in the mid-20th century. Arriving in the United States in 1940 with little knowledge of English — his legs bowed by a childhood case of rickets — Segura was recruited by the University of Miami's tennis coach, the prominent amateur player Gardner Mulloy. In addition to rickets, he also had malaria as a child, but doctors said that tennis would strengthen him. He began playing while a ball boy at an exclusive club in Guayaquil, getting the job through a wealthy businessman who employed his father as a caretaker. As a youngster, Segura was too small (he grew to 5-foot-6 and 150 pounds or so as a pro) and too weak to use the orthodox one-handed forehand so he developed his two-fisted shot. He would go on to the N.C.A.A. singles tennis championship each year from 1943 to 1945. He reached the singles semifinals of the United States Nationals in Forest Hills, Queens, every year from 1942 to 1945. Segura turned pro in 1947 and toured around the world with Kramer and figures like Pancho Gonzalez, Bobby Riggs, Tony Trabert and the Australians Lew Hoad, Ken Rosewall and Frank Sedgman. He won the prestigious U.S. Pro Tennis Championships singles title each year from 1950 to 1952. He was inducted into the International Tennis Hall of Fame in Newport, R.I., in 1984.

Happy Hispanic Heritage Month
