CELEBRATING HISPANIC/LATINX HERITAGE MONTH

Celia Cruz was born in Havana, Cuba, on October 21, 1925. Cruz was talented from a young age. She planned to become a teacher, but dropped out of teaching college to study at Havana's National Conservatory of Music. In 1950, she became the lead singer of the immensely popular band, La Sonora Matancera, where her voice began to appear on the radio and TV, and the Tropicana Nightclub in Havana. She married the trumpet player, Pedro Knight. After the Cuban Revolution in 1959, Castro took over Cuba. At the time, Cruz and the band were in Mexico. She and her husband moved to the U.S. to become citizens instead of returning to Cuba. She was banned from Cuba in retribution. Celia was a true pioneer of AfroLatinidad, focusing on the African elements of her identity (music, lyrics and dress) at a time when it was not popular to do so. In 1974, Celia was one of a group of artists including B.B. King, James Brown, The Spinners, Bill Withers and Miriam Makeba that performed in Kinshasa, Zaire alongside other top local American groups. Over the course of an amazing career, Celia recorded more than 80 albums and songs, earned 23 Gold Records, and won five Grammy Awards.
