April is National Poetry Month: Today's poem for April 21, 2017 celebrates Earth Day which is tomorrow. So today's light-hearted poem invites you to think about nature in the whimsical way that Shel Silverstein writes about it.

Tryin' On Clothes

I tried on the farmer's hat, didn't fit..
A little too small—just a bit too floppy.
Couldn't get used to it,
Took it off.

I tried on the dancer's shoes,
A little too loose.
Not the kind you could use for walkin'.
Didn't feel right in 'em,
kicked 'em off.

I tried on the summer sun,
felt good.
Nice and warm – knew it would.
Tried the grass beneath bare feet,
felt neat.
Finally, finally felt well-dressed,
Nature's clothes fit me best.

Attention: The Preuss School GSA would like you to know that today, Friday April 21th is the nationally sponsored GLSEN Day of Silence which is designed to bring attention to anti-LGBTQ+ name-calling. This event asks community members to stand in solidarity with those voices who are silenced daily by discrimination and harassment by choosing to be verbally silent for the day. Our hope is to one day End the Silence for this community. (4/21 Ms. Patrick)
